About the ground:

AA Shooting School is a new business set up by instructor Norman Fuller, with the aim of helping shooters to improve their technique and skills. As such, the ground and all the traps are tailored with tuition, not competitions, firmly in mind.

Norman has developed his own style of instruction, which initially moves away from confusing lead pictures and focuses on the fundamentals of hand-eye coordination and gun mount, commenting that: "The key to good shooting is consistent gun mount and eyes fixed firmly on the target, letting hand and eye successfully complete the shot. I have found that once clients realise how much more efficient this method is, their confidence and therefore hit rate improve dramatically."

How does the ground differ from other shooting grounds?

Shooters get Norman's full attention and use of the entire shooting ground. This means no waiting around in queues to get to the appropriate trap and so makes lessons better value for money. Most of the traps are mobile, which means no wandering around trying to locate a trap that suits the shooter's ability and training requirements. The targets are set purely for instruction and can be quickly adjusted to suit the client's needs, allowing their skills and confidence to develop at a pace that's right for them. Tower targets can be shot from a range of positions, providing targets of varying heights, angles, speeds and difficulties, again helping the shooter to be presented with new challenges as they improve their skills.

Extras:

The tower can also be used for driven clays for game shooting practice/instruction. Norman hosts corporate and activity days, employing the help of two additional qualified instructors.

Do you hold competitions?

No, the shooting school is dedicated to tuition.

Future plans/events:

Norman has a few plans in the pipeline. He is currently working on getting schools in the area involved in shooting, and is looking to offer a structured course of lessons, rather than just 'letting the kids shoot'.

He would also like to encourage more groups to come for half days of tuition to keep lesson costs down, and to encourage more ladies, youngsters, beginners and game shooters to come and learn as a group. ■
